I just thought it was so important to acknowledge and thank The Thyroid Trust for what the organisation has done for me - I know I am one person but for me the impact is massive. I owe The Thyroid Trust so much -
Jenny Allen,
thyroid patient

Why you are needed

Thyroid disorders affect a significant portion of the population in the UK, with a prevalence rate of 1 in 20 individuals. Notably, women are six times more likely to be affected than men. Situated in the front of the neck, the thyroid gland is shaped like a butterfly and holds paramount importance as a hormonal gland. It plays a crucial role in the bodies metabolism, growth, development, and the regulation of numerous bodily functions.

Make a difference

By extending your support to The Thyroid Trust, you can actively contribute to the enhancement and expansion of our events, the outreach to more patients, and the amplification of our campaigns. Through these efforts, we can significantly improve the lives of thousands of thyroid patients across the United Kingdom.

If you're interested in learning more about our future plans, campaigns, projects, and how you can become involved, we warmly invite you to get in touch.

Your engagement and participation would be greatly appreciated.

Our Work

My malfunctioning thyroid gland, which turned out to be hypothyroidism, turned me into somebody I could hardly recognise: large, lethargic and ill at ease with the world. Diagnosis and treatment helped turn me back to my real self. This is why the work of The Thyroid Trust in raising awareness, improving diagnosis times, campaigning for better treatment options and more research into thyroid conditions is so important

Michael Rosen,
The Thyroid Trust
Ambassador

We organise regular peer support and information events, both online and in person. Over the past four years, we have actively pursued initiatives to influence positive change.

This includes promotion of clinical trials, engaging with members of parliament, providing input into primary care changes within the NHS and fostering collaborations with our esteemed thyroid partners.

About Us

The Thyroid Trust is a registered thyroid charity in the UK, led by patients, but working closely with medical professionals and researchers.

Our core objective is to provide trustworthy information and peer support, actively striving to raise awareness about thyroid disorders and drive improvements for all thyroid patients.

Our Vision

Our vision is of a world where people affected by thyroid disease are taken seriously, treated well & better understood; where thyroid disease is widely talked about, patients get all the information & support they need, can live a good life & feel empowered with their conditions
